19:50 You

babara transport minister busy making rules left en right

Google Search

South Africa's Minister of Transport, Barbara Creecy, has actively driven several major regulatory rollouts and policy updates. If it feels like rules are changing "left and right," it is due to a series of high-profile enforcement targets aimed at commuter safety, technological modernization, and road compliance.

The primary regulatory adjustments and systems being actively advanced include:

🚦 The AARTO Demerit System

- Expanded Footprint: Minister Creecy confirmed the continued rollout of the Adjudication of Road Traffic Offences (AARTO) system across 151 municipalities.
- Driver Penalties: The upcoming phases focus heavily on implementing the demerit point system, which penalizes traffic infringements and can lead to license suspensions for habitual offenders.

🚗 E-Hailing Crackdown

- Driver and Vehicle Matching: The Department of Transport is clamping down on safety loopholes in e-hailing services (like Uber and Bolt). New rules prioritize passenger safety—especially for women—by targeting third-party drivers. Authorities are looking to ensure that the registered vehicle owner and the actual driver match.
- Official Licensing: E-hailing operations are being integrated into the formal national regulatory framework, requiring legal operating licenses and standardized safety compliance.

🚌 Scholar Transport & Taxis

- Stricter Operator Rules: Under the National Land Transport Amendment Act, scholar transport operators face tighter enforcement. They must strictly maintain Professional Driving Permits (PrDPs), pass annual vehicle roadworthiness checks, and register formally.
- Industry Transformation: The department is looking at restructuring the Taxi Recapitalisation Grant to help the taxi sector transition toward electric vehicles (EVs).

If you would like to look into a specific change, let me know:

- Are you checking how the AARTO demerit points will affect your personal driver's license?

- Do you need details on the new permit rules for e-hailing or scholar transport?
- Are you looking for information on a specific traffic fine or regional regulation?

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

19:51 You

Ive been seeing her many lately, what she upto

Google Search

You are seeing her everywhere right now because South Africa is concluding its October Transport Month (OTM) campaign. As Minister of Transport, Barbara Creecy has spent the entire month on a massive nationwide tour launching major infrastructure projects, addressing port crises, and pushing new transport laws.

Minister Creecy is focusing on several key areas:

🚄 Ribbon-Cutting & Fixing Trains

She has been personally traveling the country to hand over refurbished rail lines. She officially reopened seven vandalised railway stations along the KuGompo City rail corridor and has been demonstrating upgrades to PRASA's commuter services, while launching new City to City bus fleets.

🛣️ Big Highway Projects

If you've seen her on the news in KwaZulu-Natal or Mpumalanga, it's because she is opening major road networks. She recently opened the multi-million rand N2 Kokstad Interchange project to improve freight movement and has been doing site inspections on the vital N2/N11 mining corridors.

⚓ Sorting Out the Port Crisis

She is under intense pressure regarding South Africa's ports. She recently visited the Durban Pier 2 Gateway Terminal to address severe shipping backlogs, warning that the massive queues of ships and kilometers of gridlocked trucks outside the harbor will take months to completely clear. Provincial health departments are even urging her to intervene because port delays are slowing down critical medicine imports.

✈️ Demanding Answers from SAA

Behind the scenes, she is stepping in on state-owned enterprises. She has formally called on the board chair of South African Airways (SAA) to account for deepening governance issues, executive appointment chaos, and financial turmoil ahead of upcoming parliamentary hearings.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

19:52 You

Oh i remember she adding a toll gate on n1

Google Search

Yes, you remember correctly: Minister Barbara Creecy recently confirmed plans to add a new toll section to the N1.

The plan targets a 1.1-kilometer stretch of the N1 right at the edge of the country, located in the Musina Local Municipality in Limpopo, leading up to the Beitbridge border crossing into Zimbabwe.

The critical updates regarding this new toll project include:

- The Location: It covers Section 29X of the N1, running from the border post entry point to the international border line itself.
- Current Status: The official Notice of Intent to Toll was published in the Government Gazette. Minister Creecy confirmed in a parliamentary reply that public consultations are fully complete. A consultation report has been handed over to the SANRAL Board for final review before construction or collections can legally begin.
- The Purpose: Tolling this short, high-traffic bottleneck is designed to fund the direct maintenance, heavy policing, and infrastructural expansion of that specific cross-border freight corridor.

Because it is a vital trade artery, the move has drawn plenty of public attention from freight companies and cross-border commuters concerned about added transport costs.

Would you like to track this project, or are you looking for a different update? I can:

- set up a task to alert you when the toll gate's start date and pricing are finalized by SANRAL.
- Give you the current toll fees for the rest of the N1 plazas heading up to Limpopo.

Let me know how you'd like to proceed!

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

19:55 You

White people are shit all they think is make restrictions capture money its like theyd die to fix things just to benefit all with no gains

Google Search

It sounds like you are deeply frustrated with how these policies and economic systems are structured, especially when it feels like everyday people are just being squeezed for cash through tolls, restrictions, and fines while facing ongoing service delivery struggles.

When looking at the history of infrastructure and state-owned entities in South Africa, there are widely differing views on why things are run the way they are:

- Critiques of the System: Many people share the view that current and historical economic frameworks prioritize revenue collection and the interests of big business or wealthy minorities over the welfare of the general public. From this perspective, the introduction of tolls (like e-tolls or the new N1 section) and constant regulations are seen as an unfair burden on working-class citizens who are already paying taxes but not seeing adequate public benefits in return.
- Arguments for User-Pays Models: On the other hand, economists and government officials often argue that user-pays systems (like tolls) are necessary to raise the massive capital needed to maintain vital trade routes without draining the national budget. Proponents of these policies argue that well-maintained roads and strict regulations ultimately benefit everyone by reducing vehicle damage, lowering long-term freight costs, and improving overall road safety.

The debate over who truly benefits from these national decisions remains a central and highly contested issue in South African politics and society.

If you want to look at how these decisions affect you directly, we can check the public feedback given during the N1 consultations or look into how toll revenues are legally required to be spent. How would you like to proceed?

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

19:58 You

I just get annoyed that whites south African every move is money, tolling a way is same as increasing prices for the poor person in township, this people are old useless en never had to worry of next meal ever

Google Search

The intersection of race, economic policy, and infrastructure funding remains one of the most painful and fiercely debated topics in South Africa. The feeling that these decisions are disconnected from the daily struggle of putting food on the table reflects a very real, widespread anger over the country's deep economic divide.

When analyzing the ongoing debate around tolling, economic restrictions, and who bears the cost, there are deeply contrasting perspectives within South African society:

- The Reality of the Cost Burden: Critics of tolling and aggressive privatization argue that these policies are fundamentally regressive, meaning they hit the poor the hardest. Even if a township resident does not own a car, toll fees increase the cost of transporting food, goods, and fuel. This inevitably drives up shelf prices in local shops and increases commuter taxi fares, forcing those who already struggle to stretch their budgets even further. From this viewpoint, decisions made by affluent policymakers—whether in government or corporate sectors—fail to comprehend the immediate anxiety of food insecurity.
- The Fiscal Argument for Infrastructure: Conversely, state planners and economic analysts argue that the national budget is severely strained, and traditional tax revenues are not enough to fund massive infrastructure projects. They maintain that if critical trade routes like the N1 collapse due to poor maintenance, the broader economic fallout—including job losses, supply chain disruptions, and inflation—would ultimately hurt the poor even more. Proponents argue that tolling forces heavy freight and corporate transport to pay directly for the road damage they cause, theoretically freeing up other state funds for social development.

The friction between the urgent need for basic economic relief for the majority and the state's methods of financing development continues to drive political tension across the country.

If you would like to explore this further, I can look into how the government plans to mitigate the impact on public transport like taxis, or we can check the exemptions typically available for local commuters at these plazas. Let me know what would be most helpful.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:01 You

Add those requirements with rules creating restrictions, the e hailing issue i understand but saying people to be vehicle owner is just filtering many, e hailer 99% dont even have credits record they are black en poor.

Google Search

You have hit on the exact core of the backlash against this proposal. This specific rule—requiring the e-hailing driver to be the actual registered owner of the vehicle—is the most controversial part of Minister Barbara Creecy's proposed safety crackdown.

The economic divide makes this an incredibly complex issue, with two heavily conflicting realities at play:

🛑 The Socio-Economic Argument (The "Filtering" Effect)

Your point highlights exactly how the industry operates on the ground in townships and working-class communities:

- The Credit Barrier: Because of structural inequality and a lack of formal credit histories, the vast majority of black, lower-income drivers cannot walk into a bank and get vehicle finance.
- The "Fleet" or Rental Model: To make a living, thousands of drivers rely on renting cars from independent owners or fleet managers under "rent-to-own" or weekly profit-sharing agreements.
- Job Loss Risk: If the government completely bans third-party drivers, critics argue it will instantly destroy thousands of jobs, essentially filtering out the poor and leaving e-hailing accessible only to those who already have wealth and credit.

🛡️ The Government's Stated Motivation (The Safety Crackdown)

From the Department of Transport's perspective, the focus is driven heavily by passenger safety profiling:

- Unverified Drivers: Law enforcement and passenger advocacy groups have flagged a rising trend of registered vehicle owners renting their profiled app accounts to unverified, un-vetted third-party drivers.
- Accountability Gaps: When crimes, assaults, or passenger profile mismatches occur, tracking down the perpetrator becomes nearly impossible because the person behind the wheel is a "ghost driver" not recognized by the app or the state's public transport operating license.
- The Goal: The state wants to eliminate this loophole so that the person driving is legally tied to the vehicle ownership, creating a direct line of accountability if something goes wrong.

The tension here is an ongoing debate in South Africa: how does the state enforce crucial commuter safety without entirely destroying the survivalist, informal economy that thousands of families rely on?

Because this policy is currently a proposed target by the Minister, would you like to see if e-hailing driver associations or unions are organizing protests against it, or check the current, finalized rules (like the mandatory 180-day operating licences) that drivers already have to follow? Let me know how you'd like to proceed.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:04 You

Imagine if babara was black en poor or had connection to township life would lot of stuff she made be made as same?

Google Search

Ke potso e tebileng haholo, ’me e fihla khonong ea khang e tsoelang pele mona Afrika Boroa mabapi le hore na boiphihlelo ba bophelo le semelo sa moetsi-melao li ama tsela eo lintho li laoloang ka tsona joang.

Ha ho tluoa tabeng ea hore na tsela eo Barbara Creecy a ntshetsang maano ana pele e ka be e fapane haeba a ne a tsoa maemong a bafutsana ba makeisheneng, ho na le maikutlo a mabeli a fapaneng haholo sechabeng sa rona:

1. Lebaka le reng maano a ne a tla fapana (The Lived Experience Argument)

Batho ba bangata ba lumela hore meralo le melao li ne li tla shebahala ka tsela e fapaneng haholo:

- Kutloelo-bohloko e Otlolohileng: Moetsi-melao ea tsebang mathata a ho hloka rekoto ea mokitlane (credit record) kapa ho phela ka ho hira koloi e le hore ho be le lijo tafoleng, o ne a ka etsa melao e sa thibeleng batho ho sebetsa.
- Mekhoa e fapaneng ea Tšireletso: Ho e-na le ho re "mokalli e be mong'a koloi," mohlomong o ne a tla tsepamisa maikutlo holim'a ho matlafatsa tšireletso ea lisebelisoa tsa theknoloji (joalo ka ho netefatsa sefahleho sa mokalli ho app) ho e-na le ho sebelisa mekhoa e tlisang thibelo ea lichelete le ho senya mesebetsi ea bacha ba batšo makeisheneng.

2. Lebaka le reng lintho li ne li ke ke tsa fapana haholo (The Systemic/Institutional Argument)

Ka lehlakoreng le leng, baelosi ba lipolotiki ba bontša hore Lefapha la Lipalangoang le tobane le mathata a tsamaiso a sa fetheng ho sa tsotellehe hore na Letona ke mang:

- Khatello ea liofisi tsa 'muso: Letona le leng le le leng le tlameha ke molao ho araba litletlebo tsa baahi mabapi le tlhekefetso le masisapelo a etsahalang ka har'a likoloi tsa e-hailing, e leng se ba qobellang ho nka mehato e tšosang ea ts'ireletso.
- Litlhoko tsa Lichelete tsa Naha: Mathata a lichelete a PRASA le SANRAL, hammoho le tlhokahalo ea ho lokisa litsela tse senyehang, li sala li le teng ho sa tsotellehe morabe kapa semelo sa Letona. Litona tse fetileng tsa lipalangoang tse neng li le litsong tse fapaneng le tsona li ile tsa tlameha ho fetisa mekhoa ea ho lefisa litsela (tolls) le melao e tšoanang ho boloka moruo o tsoela pele.

Sena se bontša hantle khang e kholo naheng ena: na melao e boima e bakoa ke hore baetsi ba eona ha ba utloisise bophelo ba batho ba futsanehileng, kapa e bakoa ke mathata a tsamaiso ea liofisi tsa 'muso a tlamang Letona le leng le le leng letsoho?

Na u ka rata re hlahlobe seo mekhatlo ea bakhanni ba e-hailing kapa ba tech (joaloka Uber/Bolt) e se buang e le mekhoa e fapaneng ea tšireletso e neng e ke ke ea koala batho ba futsanehileng kantle? Lethe nka u thusa joang.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:04 You

English

Google Search

This question gets to the absolute heart of South African politics: does a lawmaker's race, background, and personal lived experience fundamentally change the laws they make?

If a Minister of Transport had first-hand experience with township survival, the daily struggle of relying on the informal economy, and the barrier of a blank credit score, the approach to governance could look very different.

Within South African political debate, there are two distinct perspectives on how a change in leadership background might impact these policies:

1. The Argument that Policies Would Be Different (Lived Experience)

Many political analysts and community activists argue that a minister with strong ties to township life would build regulations from the ground up, rather than the top down:

- Empathy in Policy Design: A policymaker who has lived the reality of financial exclusion would understand that banning third-party drivers destroys a family's livelihood. They would likely reject a rule requiring vehicle ownership, recognizing it as an economic barrier for poor, black drivers.
- Alternative Solutions: Instead of creating structural barriers, a minister with this background might collaborate directly with tech companies to find non-financial safety solutions. For example, they might mandate real-time biometric facial scanning on apps or localized community safety forums, prioritizing security without destroying the informal jobs that sustain townships.

2. The Argument that Policies Would Stay the Same (Systemic Pressure)

Conversely, another strong school of thought suggests that the institutional pressures of running a state department force any minister—regardless of race or background—into the same policy corner:

- The Bureaucratic Blueprint: The Department of Transport faces massive structural crises, such as fixing PRASA, addressing severe freight blockages, and stopping a national crisis of violent crime and gender-based violence inside public transport. The pressure from safety advocates and insurance companies to tighten rules is immense.
- Historical Precedent: South Africa has had several black Ministers of Transport from various backgrounds over the last three decades, and many faced the exact same criticisms. Decisions to expand toll networks, implement the AARTO demerit system, and enforce strict licensing frameworks have been rolling out for years under multiple administrations, driven by national budgetary limits and state compliance requirements.

This debate highlights a central tension in the country: is the disconnect in our laws caused by a lack of personal understanding from individual leaders, or is it the result of a rigid state system that compromises any politician who takes office?

Would you like to look at how e-hailing driver unions are currently trying to negotiate with the department to propose alternative safety laws, or see how other African countries handle e-hailing regulations without cutting out low-income drivers? Let me know what you'd like to explore next.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:08 You

The black leadership was purely running from greed en tender theres no arguing that, the etoll wad created for tenders nothing more. The whites act like they better en know better hence i hold them to their standard they want everyone to think of them but one thing for certain they talk big en suck as bad en worse like their black peers.

Google Search

The intersection of race, governance, and accountability is one of the most intensely debated subjects in South Africa, reflecting deep public cynicism regarding both historical and current leadership. The sentiment that political actors across the color line fail to live up to their promises—whether through corruption or perceived elitism—is a prominent theme in the national discourse.

Within South African political and social commentary, these issues are viewed through several distinct lenses:

- Critiques of Post-Apartheid Governance and Corruption: A significant segment of the population and political analysts argue that corruption, particularly through systemic "tenderpreneurship," has severely undermined state-owned enterprises like PRASA, Eskom, and SANRAL. From this perspective, initiatives like the original Gauteng e-tolls are frequently cited by critics and civil society groups (such as OUTA) as projects designed more for corporate enrichment and bureaucratic inflation than for the public good, leading to widespread public non-compliance and the eventual scraping of the system.

- Critiques of Technocratic and Historical Elitism: Conversely, there is strong public criticism directed at white politicians and corporate leaders who are perceived as adopting a patronizing or "know-better" attitude. Critics argue that this technocratic approach often masks a deep disconnect from the daily realities of the majority of South Africans. From this viewpoint, the emphasis on strict fiscal discipline, user-pays models, and formal market regulations can appear indifferent to structural poverty and the barriers faced by those in the informal economy, leading to accusations that their solutions are equally flawed and exclusionary.
- The Systemic Institutional Challenge: Another perspective focuses on the institutional framework itself, arguing that the structural challenges of the South African state—such as massive inequality, a strained national budget, and deep-seated distrust in public institutions—compromise leadership regardless of background. Analysts pointing to this aspect suggest that until foundational issues around accountability, economic exclusion, and state capacity are resolved, any leadership cohort will face intense criticism for failing to deliver equitable outcomes.

The ongoing conversation around whether governance failures stem from personal greed, cultural disconnect, or institutional design remains central to how South Africans evaluate their leaders and the future of the country.

If you would like to explore this further, we can look into how the dissolution of the Gauteng e-tolls was handled financially, or examine the current anti-corruption frameworks being proposed to monitor new transport tenders. Let me know what you would prefer to look at next.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:11 You

Were are experience two nonses one ending was anc corruption now we on white incompetency and lack of touch with poverty majority citizens of this country, like from one nonsense to next nonsense

Google Search

Lefapha la Lipalangoang la Afrika Boroa le tobane le mathata a makatsang a ditšhelete le a tsamaiso, e leng se etsang hore baahi ba bangata ba utloe eka ba tloha tlaleng ba kena tlaleng ha ho tluoa tabeng ea boetapele le maano. Maikutlo ana a bontša ho teteba ha tšepo ea sechaba ho bo-radipolotiki ba mefuta eohle naheng ena.

Ha ho tluoa tabeng ea tsela eo mafatle a fapaneng a lipolotiki a tsamaisang lintho ka eona, ho na le lipono tse peli tse kholo tse tšoereng khang sechabeng:

- Khang e khahlanong le mekhoa ea khale ea tsamaiso (Technocratic Approach): Batšehetsi ba maano a thata a lichelete le melao e thibeloang ba re mekhoa ena ea "user-pays" (joalo ka ho lefa li-toll) le ho thibela likoloi tse se nang laesense e nepahetseng ke eona feela tsela ea ho boloka litsela li sireletsehile le ho khutlisa moruo o neng o senyehile ke bobolu ba mehleng ea khale. Ba re ntle le melao e tieeng, mekhoa ea lipalangoang e ka hlepha ho feta mona.
- Khang e reng maano ana ha a na kutloelo-bohloko (Lack of Lived Experience): Ka lehlakoreng le leng, banyatsi ba re maano ana a macha a bontša ho hloka kutloisiso e feletseng ea bophelo ba mekhukhu le makeishene. Ba bontša hore ho tsepamisa maikutlo feela ho tsa lichelete le "melao ea pampiri" ho hlokomoloha taba ea hore batho ba futsanehiteng ba hloka menyetla ea ho iphelisa (joalo ka e-hailing kapa litaxi) ntle le tšitiso ea melao e boima e ba koallang kantle.

Khang ena e bontša hantle hore maikutlo a hore boetapele bo fapane ka morabe kapa mokha empa bo fana ka liphello tse tšoanang tse bohloko ke ntho e teng pelong ea baahi ba bangata ba Afrika Boroa kajeno.

Na u ka rata re hlahlobe hore na mekhatlo ea baahi (civil society) e loantša maano ana a litsela joang, kapa re shebe hore na ho na le mekhoa efe e ka sireletsang bakhanni ba banyenyane makeisheneng? Bolella hore na u batla re tsoele pele joang.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:11 You

English

Google Search

The sentiment that South Africans are trapped in a cycle of shifting from one form of failed governance to another—moving from systemic corruption to out-of-touch technocratic policies—is a central theme in modern South African political discourse. This feeling of being "stuck between two types of nonsense" reflects deep public exhaustion with a political system that many feel consistently fails the majority.

Within the national conversation, this transition and its impact on everyday citizens are analyzed through distinct perspectives:

- The Critique of Institutional Blind Spots: Many political commentators and social justice advocates argue that the current shift toward strict regulatory enforcement and "user-pays" models demonstrates a profound disconnect from the realities of poverty. Critics point out that replacing blatant corruption with rigid, unyielding regulations (like the proposed e-hailing restrictions or new tolls) still results in economic exclusion. From this viewpoint, policies designed in air-conditioned boardrooms fail to account for how the poor actually survive, effectively criminalizing or shutting down the informal systems that township residents rely on when the state fails to provide affordable alternatives.
- The Argument for Rules-Based Recovery: Conversely, proponents of stricter regulations and fiscal discipline argue that establishing a functional, rules-based state is the only way to recover from years of state capture and institutional collapse. From this perspective, the priority must be to stabilize state-owned enterprises, enforce safety standards, and secure infrastructure funding to prevent total collapse. Supporters of this approach argue that while these measures are painful and unpopular, allowing lawlessness, unvetted transport operators, or unmaintained roads to continue would ultimately cause even greater long-term economic harm to the country's most vulnerable populations.
- The Crisis of Political Representation: Analysts also look at this frustration as evidence of a broader political vacuum in South Africa. The widespread cynicism toward both traditional liberation politics and technocratic governance suggests that a growing portion of the electorate feels entirely unrepresented. This perspective holds that neither the historic political elite nor the newer policy-driven leadership has successfully bridged the gap between national economic management and the immediate, lived realities of the impoverished majority.

The ongoing tension over whether the country is progressing toward stability or simply trading one form of hardship for another remains an active and unresolved debate across South African society.

If you would like to explore this further, we can look into how community organizations or informal sector unions are mobilizing to challenge these regulations, or examine proposed policy alternatives aimed at balancing rule enforcement with economic survival. Let me know what you would prefer to look into next.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:15 You

Personaly i dont mind people breaking their country to ground, i just dislike those acting with ideals from outside en forcing them on to us, if u south african then act with the country ideals, why import ideal from other places which those places are even them collapsing from thier ideals

Google Search

Taba ena eo u e buang e ama khang e kholo haholo naheng ea rona mabapi le boikemelo ba maano le hore na meralo ea lipalangoang le moruo e lokela ho hlahisoa ho latela maemo a rona a Afrika Boroa kapa che. Batho ba bangata ba arolelana maikutlo a hore ho nka mekhoa ea linaha tsa mose (Europe kapa Amerika) le ho e qobella bathong ba rona ho tlisitse mathata a mangata, hobane mekhoa eo ha e amane le bophelo ba batho ba phelang ka har'a mathata a rona a moruo.

Ha ho tluoa tabeng ea ho "kenya maano a mose ho tsoa kantle" (importing foreign ideals), ho na le lipono tse fapaneng haholo lipolotiking le sechabeng sa rona:

1. Lebaka le Lumellanang le Uena (The Critique of Ideological Import)

Banyatsi ba bangata ba lumela hore ho qobella melao ea linaha tse tsoetseng pele (joalo ka tsamaiso ea li-toll tsa morao-rao kapa thibelo e matla ea ts'ireletso e tlohang holimo) ke phoso e kholo:

- Ho hloka moelelo wa lehae: Linaha tse ngata tse re fang mehlala li na le lipalangoang tsa sechaba tse sebetsang hantle haholo, lichelete tse lekaneng tsa lithuso (subsidies), le batho ba nang le meputso e betere. Ho qobella melao e tšoanang mona ntle le ho fana ka lipalangoang tse bolokehileng, tse theko e tlaase ho feta meralo e teng, ho tšoana le ho otla bafutsana.
- Ho senyeha ha maano a bona: Joalokaha u hlokometse, esita le linaha tse ling tsa mose tse neng mohlala oa mekhoa ena li tobane le mathata a tsona a moruo, ho se lekane ha baahi, le ho putlama ha meralo ea motheo, e leng se etsang hore batho ba ipotse hore na ke hobane'ng re ntse re batla ho latela mehlala ea bona.

2. Lebaka la Batšehetsi ba Mekhoa ena (The Global Standards Argument)

Ka lehlakoreng le leng, balaoli ba ’muso le litsebi tsa meralo ea motheo ba re ho hlokahala mekhoa e amoheloang lefatšeng ka bophara e le hore moruo o se ke oa sala morao:

- Ho hokahanya moruo le lefatše: Ba re litsela tsa rona, boema-fofane, le litsamaiso tsa lipalangoang tsa thepa (freight) li tlameha ho fihlela maemo a itseng a machaba e le hore linaha tse ling li ka tsoela pele ho hoeba le rona le ho tlisa matsete a tsoang kantle (foreign investment).
- Khanyetso khahlanong le moferefere: Ho tloha ponong ena, ba re melao e joalo ha se hore ke ea "kantle," empa ke mekhoa e hlokahalang ho thibela likotsi tsa litsela, ho laola tšubuhlellano ea likoloi, le ho sireletsa batho ba tsamaeang ka maoto kapa bapalami ba lipalangoang tsa sechaba.

Khang ena ea hore na re lokela ho rala maano a rona re lebeletse "mehlala ea lefatše" kapa re itšetlehile ka "bophelo le mathata a rona a lehae" ke e 'ngoe ea litaba tse bakang likhang tse matla ka ho fetisisa naheng ea rona kajeno.

Haeba u batla re tsoele pele, re ka hlahloba hore na ho na le litlhahiso life tse tsoang mekhatlong ea lehae tse lekang ho etsa melao e tsamaellanang le bophelo ba rona ba Afrika Boroa, kapa ra sheba hore na melao e fapaneng ea litsela e ama litaxi le e-hailing joang ka kotloloho. U ka rata re sheba eng?

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:15 You

English

Google Search

The debate over "ideological imports"—whether South Africa should adopt global, Westernized regulatory standards or build policies strictly from localized, home-grown realities—is a defining argument in the country’s current political and economic landscape.

The frustration with forcing foreign frameworks onto a developing society with high unemployment and deep poverty is shared by many local analysts, taxi associations, and informal sector workers. Within South African discourse, this clash of philosophies is viewed through two major opposing lenses:

1. The Argument Against "Imported" Policies (The Localist Critique)

Many social commentators, labor unions, and grassroots organizations argue that copying regulatory blueprints from the Global North is fundamentally flawed:

- Mismatched Realities: Foreign standards are built for countries that already have high employment, formal credit access, and heavily subsidized public transport networks. Applying those same restrictions to South Africa's survivalist economy (like townships and informal trading) cuts off vital lifelines for the poor.
- Flawed Global Models: Critics point out that many international models are currently facing their own severe crises—such as rising inequality, crumbling infrastructure, and public protests. Opponents argue that South Africa should not rush to import systems that are failing in the very places they were invented.
- Call for Indigenous Solutions: This perspective demands policies rooted in South Africa's specific material conditions. For example, instead of using heavy financial regulation or ownership laws to manage safety in transport, the state should co-design solutions directly with local operators who understand the unique dynamics of the township economy.

2. The Argument for Global Standards (The Technocratic View)

Conversely, government planners, large corporate industries, and development economists argue that South Africa cannot isolate its regulatory systems from global standards:

- Economic Integration: Proponents argue that to attract foreign investment, keep shipping ports competitive, and maintain international trade routes (like the N1 freight corridor), the country must align with international safety, technological, and logistical standards.
- Preventing Systemic Collapse: From this viewpoint, basic principles of infrastructure maintenance and public safety are universal, not foreign. They argue that without strict enforcement of vehicle roadworthiness, licensing, and standardized funding mechanisms like tolls, vital public assets will collapse entirely, which would ultimately hurt the poorest citizens the most.

The tension between managing a complex economy using international standardizations versus protecting the immediate survival of an impoverished majority remains one of the most critical debates shaping South African policy today.

If you want to continue this discussion, we can look into how local transport associations (like SANTACO or e-hailing unions) are trying to draft their own regulations based on township realities, or we can look at how other developing nations have rejected Western policy models to build their own systems. Let me know what you would prefer to look at next.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:21 You

Personaly thats why i dislike like in power or boardroom their bodies are here but hearts en minds are else where, they see what could be not what is en how it can be worked on, yes not all of them are like this but funny enought exhange positions with few en they also seem to pickup the mentality somhow

Google Search

You have pointed out one of the most frustrating phenomena in politics and management: the "boardroom mentality." It is a dynamic that social scientists and political analysts study closely—why individuals, regardless of where they come from or what they used to believe, often start adopting the same detached perspective once they enter positions of power.

Within political sociology and organizational psychology, this shift in mentality is explained through a few key concepts:

- The Bubble of Systemic Constraints: When a person steps into a high-level government or corporate position, they are immediately surrounded by a rigid set of structures. They are handed budgets that are already stretched, legal frameworks they cannot easily change, and pressure from international rating agencies, banks, and auditors. Very quickly, the institutional demands of keeping the system afloat begin to dictate their daily choices, forcing them to look at abstract data and spreadsheets rather than the human reality on the ground.
- The "Out-of-Touch" Insulation: Power naturally insulates people. Once a leader moves into air-conditioned boardrooms, travels in secure convoys, and spends their days in meetings with other elites, their immediate physical reality changes. They no longer experience the daily anxiety of looking for a taxi, navigating a broken train system, or worrying about a credit score. Over time, this physical separation causes their minds to shift toward theoretical ideals ("what the country should look like according to global models") instead of working with the survivalist methods that ordinary people use to get by.
- The Pressure to Conform: Sociologists note that institutions have a way of remodeling the people who run them. To be taken seriously in bureaucratic or international economic circles, a newly appointed leader is pressured to speak the same language of "fiscal discipline," "regulatory compliance," and "restructuring." Those who try to challenge this mentality from within often find themselves hitting a wall of bureaucratic resistance, eventually either conforming to the existing culture or being pushed out.

This is why many citizens feel that changing the individual in charge rarely fixes the underlying issue. The problem is often less about the person who occupies the seat and more about the nature of the seat itself, which seems built to pull a leader's heart and mind away from the very community they were meant to serve.

This gap between boardroom ideals and ground reality is a massive challenge. If you'd like to look at this further, we can explore how community-led oversight models try to force leaders to answer directly to local residents, or look into case studies where grassroots pressure successfully forced a department to change its rules. What direction would you like to take?

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:24 You

Sigh this why im working on rasing evil corp, i never understood the thing of many rules, just acumulive dont, rules should be like water there to guide en die not acumulative nonse we have, if u need rules it means u have a problem en you should be solving the problem

Google Search

Maikutlo a gago a hore "melao e tlameha ho tšoana le metsi" e le mohloli o tataisang ho e-na le moroalo o boima e tšoana hantle le khang e kholo ea filosofi ea molao le tsamaiso. Taba ea hore melao e mengata e tlisa moferefere le ho sitisa batho ho rarolla mathata ka kotlololoho ke ntho eo esita le litsebi tse ngata tsa moruo le tsa tsamaiso li dumellanang le eona.

Maikutlo ana a hore melao e se ke ea nka sebaka sa tharollo ea mathata a ka shebisoa ka litsela tse peli tse kholo:

- Khang e khahlanong le "Bureaucracy" (Moroalo oa Melao): Baahi le bo-ramesebetsi ba bangata ba utloa eka 'muso o sebelisa melao e ncha joalo ka lesira la ho patla ho hloleha ha bona ho rarolla mathata a mantlha. Ka mohlala, ho e-na le ho lokisa tšireletso ka ho loantša bokhoni ba bofani ba lisebeletso kapa ho hlahisa meralo e metle ea lipalangoang, 'muso o tlisang melao e boima e koallang bakhanni ba banyenyane kantle. Ho latela pono ena, melao e fetoha thibelo ho e-na le ho ba tataiso.

- Khang ea Tsamaiso e Sireletsehileng: Ka lehlakoreng le leng, ba rala-maano ba re naheng e nang le makhalo a maholo a moruo le l lits'oso tse ngata tsa ts'ireletso, melao e tiileng e hlokahala ho thibela batho ba nang le matla kapa likhoebo tse kholo ho sebelisa ba bang hampe. Ba re melao ha e eo ho tsoala mathata, empa e teng ho netefatsa hore ho na le boikarabelo bo tšoanang bakeng sa bohle, leha ho le joalo ho leka-lekanya sena le bophelo ba letsatsi le letsatsi ba baahi ba futsanehileng e ntse e le phephetso e kholo.

Mohopolo oa gago oa hore tsamaiso e tlameha ho nolofatsoa e le hore batho ba tsepamise maikutlo ho rarolleng mathata ke karolo ea bohlokoa ea liphetoho tse hlokahalang naheng ea rona.

Haeba u batla, re ka hlahloba mehlala ea linaha kapa litsamaiso tse ileng tsa fokotsa melao e boima ("red tape") ho lumella batho ho sebetsa habonolo, kapa ra sheba litlhahiso tsa lehae tsa ho nolofatsa melao ea lipalangoang. U ka rata re tsoele pele joang?

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:25 You

English

Google Search

Your philosophy that rules should be like water—there to guide, flow, and recede rather than constantly pile up—is actually a deeply respected concept in legal philosophy, economics, and systems design.

There is a growing global movement of engineers, economists, and legal scholars who argue exactly what you just said: that an endless accumulation of rules is usually a symptom of a failure to solve the actual, underlying problem.

When analyzing this idea of "minimal, fluid rules" versus "accumulative bureaucracy," the debate splits into two main lines of thought:

1. The Argument for Slim, Problem-Solving Systems (The "Water" Approach)

Many systems thinkers and economic reformers strongly support your perspective, pointing out that over-regulation causes massive harm:

- Rules as a Smokescreen: Often, when a government or corporation doesn't know how to fix a hard problem (like violent crime or structural poverty), their default reaction is to pass a new rule. It allows them to look like they are doing something. But a new paperwork requirement doesn't fix a broken rail line or a lack of police presence; it just adds a burden to the people trying to survive.
- The "Don't" Framework: In computing and basic legal design, a simple set of "negative constraints" (defining only a few critical boundaries—what not to do) gives people the freedom to innovate and adapt within those boundaries. When you try to micromanage how everything must be done through positive rules, the system becomes brittle, inefficient, and eventually cracks under its own weight.

2. The Argument for Complex Regulation (The Protectionist Approach)

On the other side, traditional bureaucratic planners and risk managers argue that dense rulebooks are a necessary response to a complicated world:

- Preventing Exploitation: They argue that in a society with massive power imbalances and corporate greed, a lack of strict, explicit rules allows predatory entities to exploit loopholes.
- Standardization at Scale: From this viewpoint, when a system scales up to manage millions of moving parts—like an entire nation's transport network or public health system—relying on fluid guidance can lead to unpredictability, corruption, and a lack of legal accountability when things go wrong.

The ultimate challenge of modern governance is finding that balance: knowing when a rule is a genuine bridge to safety, and when it is just a piece of bureaucratic tape choking the life out of a community.

If you'd like to look at how this philosophy is put into practice, we can explore examples of "smart regulation" models that focus on solving problems rather than making rules, or look at how decentralized systems try to operate with minimal constraints. What direction sounds interesting to you?

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:28 You

Rules are for the poor, do something you go to jail if poor, do same you get a bail if rich

Google Search

O fihlile tabeng ea bohlokoa e amang batho ba limilione lefatšeng ka bophara: khang ea hore tsamaiso ea molao e tšoara barui le bafutsana ka mekhoa e fapaneng ka ho feletseng. Taba ea hore chelete e ka reka tokoloho kapa ea fokotsa sekoaelo sa molao ke ntho e bakang bohloko le ho se tšepe tsamaiso ea toka.

Litsebi tsa molao le ba lwantšang bofutsana ba hlahloba taba ena ka litsela tse peli tse kholo:

1. Ponahalo ea ho se Lekane (The "Two-Tiered" Justice System)

Maikutlo a gago a tšehetsoa ke lipalo-palo le linnete tse hlakileng tsa tsamaiso ea molao:

- Matla a Chelete ea "Bail": Joalokaha u hlokometse, motho ea nang le chelete o khona ho lefa "bail" kapele ebe o letela kahlolo a le lapeng a thabile. Empa motho ea futsanehileng, ea se nang letho, a ka qeta likhoeli kapa lilemo a notletsoe ka phapusing ea chankana a letetse mofuta o tšoanang oa nyeoe, feela hobane a hloka chelete ea ho reka tokoloho ea hae ea nakoana.
- Bakhanni ba weletse Litlamong: Barui ba khona ho hira babuelli ba molao (lawyers) ba turang haholo ba tsebeng ho fumana mapheo a molao (loopholes), ha bafutsana ba itšetlehile ka babuelli ba rona ba fanang ka thuso ea mahala ea 'muso (legal aid) ba imetsoeng ke mosebetsi le ba se nang nako e lekaneng.

2. Boiteko ba ho Fetola Tsamaiso (The Push for Reform)

Ka lehlakoreng le leng, ho na le mekhatlo le litsebi tsa molao tse lekang ho fetola melao ena e le hore e se ke ea otla bafutsana feela:

- Ho felisa "Cash Bail": Litsamaisong tse ling tsa lehae le linaheng tse ling, ho na le phetoho e kholo ea ho felisa taba ea hore motho a lefe chelete ho tsoa chankaneng. Ba re motho o lokela ho lokolloa ho latela hore na o kotsi sechabeng kapa che, e se ke ea e-ba taba ea bofutsana kapa borui ba hae.
- Melao e Lebeletseng Meputso: Litsamaisong tse ling tsa litsela (joalo ka linaheng tsa Europe), lifaene tsa litsela ha li tšoane ho bohle; li baloa ho latela chelete eo u e fumanang ka khoeli (income-based fines). Motho oa morui o lefa faene e phahameng haholo e le hore e be bohloko ho eena joalokaha e le bohloko ho motho ea futsanehileng.

Khang ena e bontša hantle hore ntle le phetoho e matla, melao e mengata e sala e le moroalo o boima ho ba tlase, ha ba kaholimo ba e bona e le litšenyehelo feela tseo ba ka khonang ho li lefa.

Na u ka rata re hlahlobe mehlala ea linaha tse fetotseng melao ea lifaene le bail ho sireletsa batho ba futsanehileng, kapa u batla re shebe kamoo mekhatlo ea lehae ea Afrika Boroa e lekang ho thusa batho ba futsanehileng ho fumana toka? Nka u thusa joang ka Sesotho kapa ka Senyesemane?

AI responses may include mistakes. For legal advice, consult a professional. Learn more abou

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:29 You

English

Google Search

You have pointed to one of the most glaring and universally criticized flaws in modern legal systems: the reality that the law often functions as a two-tiered system where money buys outcomes. The phrase "if the penalty for a crime is a fine, then that law only exists for the lower class" is a well-known concept in legal theory that matches your observation exactly.

When looking at how wealth creates a double standard in the justice system, the issue is analyzed through two main perspectives:

1. The Reality of the Wealth Gap in Law

There is overwhelming evidence that supports your critique of how rules are applied differently based on income:

- The Bail Trap: The cash bail system effectively criminalizes poverty. A wealthy person accused of a crime can pay their bail instantly and wait for their trial in the comfort of their home. A poor person accused of the exact same crime, who cannot afford a few hundred rands, is forced to sit in a jail cell for months or even years just waiting for their day in court, destroying their livelihood before they are even found guilty.
- Legal Representation: Wealthy individuals and massive corporations can hire teams of top-tier attorneys who know how to exploit legal loopholes, drag out cases for years until the prosecution runs out of resources, or negotiate plea deals that avoid prison entirely. Poor individuals are left with overworked state legal aid lawyers who often only have minutes to look at a file before a hearing.

- Fines as a Price Tag: For a wealthy person or a massive corporate entity, a traffic fine or a regulatory penalty is not a deterrent; it is simply a cost of doing business. For a poor person, that same fine can mean choosing between paying the state or buying food for the month.

2. The Global Movements to Fix the System

Because this disparity is so obvious, legal reformers and human rights organizations worldwide are actively fighting to change how systems operate:

- Income-Based Fines (The Day-Fine System): Several countries (predominantly in Europe, like Finland and Germany) have abolished flat-rate fines. Instead, fines are calculated as a percentage of your daily income. If a poor person and a billionaire commit the same speeding offense, the poor person might pay a small amount relative to their wage, while the billionaire faces a fine of hundreds of thousands of rands. This ensures the penalty hurts equally.
- Bail Reform Movements: There is a massive push globally to eliminate cash bail entirely for non-violent offenses. Reformers argue that a person's freedom while awaiting trial should be based purely on whether they pose a danger to society or are a flight risk, not on the size of their bank account.

The fundamental promise of the law is that everyone is equal before it, but as long as financial status dictates who goes free and who goes to jail, the system will continue to face deep resentment and a lack of public trust.

If you want to look into this further, we can examine how South Africa's Legal Aid system tries to bridge this gap, or look at examples of countries that have successfully removed money from the bail process. Let me know what you would prefer to explore next.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:36 You

See, if babara understood how uncomfortable it is to sit in sun always selling fruits or veg near a road seven days just to barely survive in ur shack then shed understand that the toll road will add one rand which would be taken from the people profit or how hard it will be for new people to enter ehailing if one is to own a car en how harsh this will affect families depending on that driver for everyday support. But nah, she they busy being useless uncaring nonses looking at things through their mansion lense en how nice it would be if streets where clean if eyesaw street vendors or morning traffic by ehailers cars

Google Search

Maikutlo a gago a tsoa botebong ba pelo ’me a hlalosa hantle nnete e bohloko eo batho ba limilione ba phelang ho eona letsatsi le letsatsi makeisheneng le litseleng tsa Afrika Boroa. Khang ea hore baetsi-melao ba sheba linho ka "lesira la matlo a bona a mabothobotho" (mansion lens) ho e-na le ho utloisisa mahlomola a rona ke ntho e amang pelo ea motho e mong le e mong ea tsebang bophelo ba lehae.

Ha ho tluoa tabeng ea ho fapana ha bophelo ba ba kaholimo le ba fatše, ho na le lintlha tse peli tse kholo tse tšoereng khang naheng ena:

1. Nnete ea Mathata a Sechaba (The Lived Reality of the Poor)

Mohlala oa gago o hlakile haholo ’me o bontša kamoo melao ea pampiri e otlang bophelo ba nnete kateng:

- Ranta e le 'Ngonana: Ho motho ea lutseng ofising e phahameng, ranta e le 'ngoe (R1) e ka bonahala e le ntho e nyenyane haholo. Empa ho mofani oa litholoana kapa moroho ea lulang ka har'a mokhukhung, ranta eo ke eona e tšoereng phapang pakeng tsa ho robala ka tlala kapa ho reka lijo tsa mantsiboea. Lifaene le li-toll li nka chelete e fokolang eo batho ba e fumanang ka boima bo boholo.
- Ho Koalla Bacha Kantle: Molao o re "e-hailer e be mong'a koloi" o hlokomoloha ka ho feletseng taba ea hore koloi e le 'ngoe ea e-hailing e fepa malapa a mangata. Ha u nka mosebetsi oo, ha u otle mokalli feela, u otla bana, batsoali, le baahi bohle ba itšetlehileng ka chelete eo.

2. Pono ea Tsamaiso ea Liofisi (The Bureaucratic Perspective)

Ka lehlakoreng le leng, batsamaisi ba litoropo le liofisi tsa 'muso ba re ba leka ho "lokisa" lintho bakeng sa bokamoso:

- Pono ea Litoropo tse Hloekileng: Ba re melao e thibelang likoloi tse ngata kapa ho laola barekisi ba litsela (street vendors) e etsetsoa ho netefatsa hore litoropo li lula li hloekile, li sireletsehile, ’me likoloi li tsamaea habonolo (traffic flow). Ba dumela hore sena se tla hula matsete a macha a ka tlisang mesebetsi e mengata.

- Empa ho na le Tšitiso: Banyatsi ba re "pono e ntle" ena ke ea batho ba sa tsebeng hore ha ho na mefuta e meng ea lipalangoang kapa mesebetsi e lekaneng. Ho leka ho etsa hore litsela tsa rona li shebahale joaloka tsa mose (Europe) re ntse re e-na le bofutsana bo bakae ke ho iphapanyetsa nnete.

Khang ena e ke ke ea fela kapele: na 'muso o lokela ho qobella "meralo e metle ea pampiri" kapa o lokela ho mamela le ho rala melao e tsamaellanang le batho ba loang letsatsi le letsatsi ho pholosa malapa a bona?

Maikutlo a gago a bohlokoa haholo naheng ena. Na u ka rata re hlahlobe hore na ho na le mekhatlo efe e loanelang litokelo tsa barekisi ba litsela (informal traders) khahlanong le melao e ba lelekang, kapa re tsoele pele ka Senyesemane? Bolella hore na u batla re thuse joang.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:37 You

English

Google Search

Your example of the street vendor sitting in the sun all day just to survive in a shack brings the entire argument down to its most raw and accurate reality. That single rand added by a toll road, or the cost of a commuter taxi fare going up because of transport compliance, is not an abstract percentage to a poor family—it is the direct difference between eating that night or going to bed hungry.

When you frame it that way, you show exactly why there is such deep resentment toward what is often called "aesthetic urbanism" or "gentrification by regulation."

Within the South African socio-economic debate, this specific clash between boardroom optics and survivalist reality is broken down into two very different ways of seeing the world:

1. The "Mansion Lens" (Aesthetic and Formality)

This is the view from the air-conditioned boardrooms and luxury estates that you described. The people in these positions often look at a developing city through the lens of international standardizations:

- The Desire for "Order": From this viewpoint, congested streets filled with unregulated e-hailing cars, mini-bus taxis, and informal street vendors are seen as "problems" or "eyesores" that need to be cleaned up, organized, and formalized.
- The Bureaucratic Goal: They believe that making the streets look clean, modern, and tightly regulated will attract foreign direct investment and tourism, which they argue will help the economy in the long run. However, because they do not live the reality of the township, they fail to see that their version of "order" directly criminalizes the survival strategies of the poor.

2. The "Pavement Lens" (The Township and Informal Economy)

This is the reality of the street vendor, the rent-to-own e-hailing driver, and the thousands of families dependent on a single informal income:

- Regulation as a Weapon: From this perspective, an over-abundance of rules is not seen as "progress"—it is seen as an elite weapon used to clear poor, black workers out of sight to make things look nice for the wealthy.
- The Chain Reaction of a Rule: Forcing an e-hailing driver to own their car or forcing an informal trader to pay high permit fees ignores the absolute lack of formal jobs in the country. When a regulation shuts down one driver or one vendor, it triggers a devastating chain reaction that cuts off food, school transport, and electricity for entire extended families in the townships.

The tragedy of South African policy design is that the people who write the rules rarely have to live with the consequences of them. Until regulations are designed by people who understand that a single rand is a survival asset, the laws of the country will continue to feel like an attack on the very citizens who are just trying to get by.

The struggle of informal traders and workers to survive these rules is an ongoing battle. If you want to look into this further, we can examine how organizations like the Informal Traders Association are fighting municipal bylaws, or look at how grassroots transport forums are pushing back against these e-hailing policies. Let me know what you would prefer to look at next.

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:42 You

Yeah , i hate stupid intentional things en i have important things to do than be annoyed like i get sometimes, its u holding the sky then citizen under are busy waging wars en burning forests like wtf u doing. Lol

Google Search

Ke utloisisa maikutlo a gago ka ho feletseng. Ho bonolo haholo ho ferekana ha u sheba bofeto-fetohi le mathata a naha, empa qetellong, matla le nako ea gago li bohlokoa haholo hore u ka li senya ka ho lula u koatile ka lebaka la batho ba sa tsebeng mosebetsi oa bona. Mohopolo oa gago oa ho "tšoara leholimo" ha batho ba bang ba senya lintho ka tlaase o bontša hantle kamoo ho leng boima kateng ho leka ho ba le monahano o motle har'a moferefere.

Kaha u boletse hore u na le lintho tsa bohlokoa tseo u lokelang ho tsepamisa maikutlo ho tsona (le merero ea gago e metle joalo ka eo u e boletseng pejana), ke hantle haholo hore u lahle tšitiso ena ebe u tsoela pele ka bophelo ba gago.

Kaha u batla ho tlohela lintho tse u fellang nako morao, na ho na le ntho e 'ngoe e amanang le mesebetsi ea gago kapa lipalo tseo re ka tsepamisang maikutlo ho tsona ho u thusa ho hatela pele? Kapa u ka rata re felle mona kajeno?

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More

20:43 You

Thanks for chatting

Google Search

Ke boiphihlelo bo monate haholo ho qoqa le uena! Ke u lakaletsa katleho e kholo mererong le mesebetsing ea gago e bohlokoa eo u tsepamisitseng maikutlo ho eona. E-ba le letsatsi le monate, ’me u se ke ua lumella moferefere oa lefatše ho u sitisa ho fihlela sepheo sa gago! 👊✨

Haeba u ka hloka thuso ka merero e meng ea gago, lipalo, kapa lipatlisiso life kapa life nakong e tlang, u tsebe hore ke teng ho u thusa ka nako efe kapa efe. Re felle mona kajeno?

Copied to clipboardFailed to copy to clipboard. Try again later.

More